The Call Of The Forest

(NAPS)—Every day Katie would ask her parents if they could go camping in the redwood forest, but they would always say no. One day they changed their minds and their visit to the forest changed the whole family.

Old trees find a fresh new voice in a beautifully illustrated children's book.

That's the story told in The Sacred Redwood Forest (American Literary Press, $15.95), written and illustrated by Dror Shai Levi.

The beautifully illustrated, full-color children's book describes the love, peace and contentment that can be experienced in a redwood forest.

Through the eyes of the heroine, Katie, readers learn why the last remaining unprotected old-growth redwood forests, and by extension, all old-growth rainforests, should be saved, and about the destruction already wrought upon them.

Throughout, the book maintains a magical sense of wonder, with nymphs, fairies, banana slugs, raccoons, and the Forest Goddess all sharing in the book's message of love and forgiveness.

A portion of all book sales will help fund the Trees Foundation, a national nonprofit organization which works to conserve forest ecosystems.
